

ABSTRACT

After thirty years Eelam war people in Sri Lanka aspired for post war reconciliation and human security development and harmony among communities in Sri Lanka. The LTTE supported propaganda is leading a campaign to tarnish the image of Sri Lankan armed forces. The transitional period from war to peace had to be bridged by the Sri Lankan Armed forces by setting the right environment to stray the civilian administration. There are many human security needs of the society that the armed forces had to fulfil during this time. Those tasks are drastically different from the traditional role and task of the Armed forces. Therefore, it is important to study about the involvement of the Sri Lanka armed forces in providing human security needs in the conflict-affected areas from 2010-2015. The study used deductive research approach through the study. This research was a mixed research, and the researcher used questionnaire and the interview questions to gather primary data. Also, the researcher utilized related journal articles, books, past theses, newspaper articles and websites as the secondary data collection sources. As per the analyses, the researcher found that all five independent variables give strong positive relationships with the Role of Army. Also, the researcher found that Sri Lank Army supports governmental authorities to conduct different types of vocational training programmes for the conflict affect affected areas' civil persons. Sri Lanka Army conducts systematic and effective mental counselling and other psychological support to families that struggling to cope with the deaths and disappearance of relatives.

Key Words: Human Security, Sri Lanka Army

